Cows are loveable creatures – do we really want to eat them?

DOCFILM

Fake Steak

15 percent of global greenhouse gas emissions, massive demands made on land and water, antibiotic resistance: Industrial livestock farming has become a global problem. That's why more and more scientists and entrepreneurs are looking for alternatives to regular meat production. One of them is Joshua Tetrick. In California, he's working on a way to grow meat in a bioreactor. In huge tanks, he multiplies the muscle cells of chickens and cultivates them with plant-based nutrients. The resulting pulp is molded into fibrous meat with the help of a plant scaffold. The documentary Fake Steak – The Taste of Future Food explores some of the alternatives to factory farming.

Parenting Matters

How do parents in France manage to get their children to eat everything? Why are children allowed to stay up so late in Spain? And how come parents in Sweden let their babies sleep outside in sub-zero temperatures? Across Europe, parenting approaches and opinions couldn't be more different. In a new series, Euromaxx looks at parenting styles as well as the general conditions for mothers and fathers in various European countries. And when it comes to the matter of raising children, there's much scope for debate. But despite all the differences, basically all parents want the same: The best for their children.

Oil – A Scarce Resource

Fuel, source of heating, and raw material for industry: Our daily lives would be unimaginable without crude oil. But supplies of the resource are finite. There's been speculation for decades over when the utilization peak will be reached. When and whether oil will completely run out. And what then? Also in Global Us: Whether it's basketball in southern Sudan or soccer in India – for many young people, sport harbors the hope for a better life.

How Germany Won Back the Nation at Euro 2024

The Germany national team was on top of the world in 2014, loved by fans around the world. But after two disastrous World Cups resulting in early exits at Russia 2018 and Qatar 2022, many people could no longer identify with the squad. At EURO 2024 the "Mannschaft" was under a lot of pressure. Criticized by many fans for political gestures and poor performances some politicians mocked them as the "rainbow team." But things changed at EURO 2024: How did a new diverse team under coach Julian Nagelsmann shake off criticism and manage to get back support? Sports Life reveals how the German team won back their country.

Sabah Hasan and Kufia Rachid are desperate for news of their son Mohammed

DOCFILM

Where Are You?

More and more people are taking the migratory route via Belarus to Poland – and disappearing without a trace. Like Mohammed Sabah, for example. In the fall of 2021, the young man set out from his home city Erbil, capital of the autonomous region of Kurdistan in Iraq. Early December 2021 was the last time he checked in with this family. After that, they heard nothing. Until in October 2022, a video emerged purportedly showing Mohammed crossing the border to Poland. But is it really Mohammed on the film? And if so, where is he now? Is he still alive? Mohammed's uncle Rekaut travels to Poland to find out. After all, the family desperately needs to know what has happened to their relative. The documentary Where Are You? – Lost on the Run.

Thomas Mann (1875 – 1955)

ARTS UNVEILED

The Magic Mountain Turns 100

It's now become what it always was – a novel of the century. Thomas Mann's "The Magic Mountain" was published 100 years ago, in November 1924. The story, set in the Swiss mountains, describes a group of people receiving treatment at a Davos sanatorium. It symbolizes an ailing society and takes the pulse of the time, but it's nevertheless highly topical: Democracy is in danger, there's a looming threat of war, the battlelines have been drawn. The issues it raises are just as explosive today as they were then. What messages does "The Magic Mountain" have for us now? And why is the novel so much more than a historical "bildungsroman"? Find out in Arts Unveiled.

THE 77 PERCENT

How Unemployment Is an Environmental Issue

The 77 Percent tackles the topic of unemployment and how it pushes young people towards activities like gold mining, deforestation and other resource-depleting ventures as way to make a living. As a result, rivers and lakes are polluted, erosion destroys the soil and land ultimately becomes more vulnerable to climate change. In the Street Debate, the magazine engages with politicians to understand their strategies for change and to hear more about the challenges we are all facing. The 77 Percent also talks to young Ghanaians who feel they don't have a choice but to exploit the country's natural resources as a means of survival.

TRANSFORMING BUSINESS

Reforming Aquaculture

Around 50 percent of global farmed salmon production takes place in Norwegian waters. Chile is in second place with 25 percent. With global demand for salmon still rising, worldwide production is expanding. But there is also a downside to the industry: Concerns about disease and die-offs in farmed stocks, the use of antibiotics and the threat to wild salmon stocks posed by aquaculture. Is it possible to expand salmon production while improving standards and conditions? The largest salmon farm in the world, in Norway, is investing heavily in an attempt to do just that. Transforming Business wants to know how state supervision and animal welfare standards can be improved.
